I feel if-us are changed. We are not what We have been: Thou wert once the centre of My soul; the axis of my life, the star, The evnorure that never sets thou wert A pleasant song—a dream of costacy— A flood of light, and I did love thee well. Thy voice, with its low music melodies, Fell like the gush of twilight waters on Mine car. Beneath thy glance my spirit waved And trembled, and the warmth and pure soft light brought trembling roses out upon my cheeks could not breathe thy name, and blushed to hear Its magic accents on another's lips! Long dreamy hours I've sat with folded hands. And vacant eyes, and thought of thee almost To madness; I remember well, I used, Ere night with her dum presence had presed by To fly from sleep, and 'neath the azure sky And starry firmament, pray, wildly pray For God to circle thee with love-to bid Each eye to smile upon thee-every voice. To whisper music for thme ear-each heart To cherish thee, and bloss thee evermore. A girl of fifteen summers was I then, With fleating hair, and streaming eyes upraised, With moon and stars above me, and their pale Sweet beauty at my feet, commingling with My tears upon the sod !

But we are changed; Ah! yes-we're wholly changed. We dwell no

Hencath love's warm equator. Far from thee I watch the glad rejoicing of the morn, Ami note the starry coming of the night? Pull many lengues of land, and more of heart Between us lie. For thou and I are changed.
